Reason For Selection	A variety of imported and other TV receivers quickly appeared on the market when NHK began broadcasting TV signals over the airwaves on February 1, 1953. Among the sets available, the earliest TV offered by a domestic manufacturer was the TV3-14T by Sharp Corporation, then known as Hayakawa Electric Industry Company. The TV3-14T thus has an important place as the starting point for today's domestic TV industry. At a time when the typical government employee earned ¥8,700 per month, the TV3-14T was priced at ¥175,000.
